Bull or Bear?

By Jim Berg

Where are we with this market? It is not a bear but it is also certainly not very bullish. It is still a rising trend and we have traded it as such but it has been frustrating.

Expert opinion is divided, as usual. Their comments/analysis entertain us but we do not trade what we feel or think so trading what the experts think is certainly not an option and never will be.

We can discuss the influence/impact of European debt, U.S. economic growth, the fiscal cliff, low P/E ratios, reliability of Chinese economic data and black swans but let's only look at what we know.

The ASX200 signalled a rising trend in April, Newsletter Edition 352.

ASX200 (XJO) Index, Edition 352

The S&P500 signalled a rising trend 13 weeks earlier.

S&P500 ($SPX) Index, Edition 352

In my study of bear markets, going back to 1989, thirteen weeks is the largest rising trend split between the indices. The norm is zero to four weeks. The previous rising trend signals for both indices, 2010, were one week apart and in 2009, the exact same week.

The norm is zero to four weeks. The previous rising trend signals for both indices, 2010, were one week apart and in 2009, the exact same week. So I continued the Caution warning in the newsletter for the following twenty weeks, through Edition 373.

In Newsletter Edition 374 we looked at the relationship between the Dow Jones Industrials and the Dow Transport Index. One of the oldest market timing tools is the Dow Theory. If the Dow Transports fails to confirm a rising Dow Jones index the market is heading for a correction. The Dow Index, below, shows a high in March – April and further highs in September – October.

Dow Jones ($DJ) Index

The Transport Index, below, shows a high in March – April and a series of lower highs. This divergence is bearish for equities.

The ASX200 & S&P500 have both broken below previous polarised support/resistance levels, see JB update this newsletter.

The ASX200 is at the same level of 15 months ago.

ASX200 (XJO) Index

Conclusion:

So what do we know?

- 13 weeks separating ASX200 & rising trend signal = unusual
- Dow Theory divergence = bearish
- Break of previous polarised support/resistance levels = bearish
- No price increase over last 15 months
- Markets are still in a rising trend = bullish

So what do we do?

- Exactly what we have been doing over the last several months - Trade the rising trend with caution.
- Focus on short-term trades using Volatility Indicators
- Trust that the trading systems use of Initial, Adjusted and Trailing Stops will continue to protect our positions as they have done in the past.
